? Hashers - not me

*"The best laid schemes o' mice an' men
Gang aft a-gley,
An' lea'e us nought but grief an' pain,
For promised joy,"*

Roughly translated, this means:

*"The best laid trails of Harriers can often turn to 🤢
And leave us lost and needing lifts in search of promised beer."*

Once again, I couldn't make the run this week, but I know for a fact that this run did have plenty of thought, energy and time put into it. I've even got camera footage to prove it!! A few weeks ago, nothing was planned, and it all somehow turned out OK. This week, a lot was planned and done.....and it still turned out OK. Let's face it....it's Hash....what can go wrong???

This weeks run was an A - B run, with a drink stop in between. Unstoppable didn't want the group to know it was an A - B run, as she wanted there to be (quote) 'a nice head fk all round'. I'd say she got her wish....certainly with the runners in any case.

Thank you to Chesty for sending me his notes, which I've outlined loosely below:

The walkers had co-hares amongst them (Inherendo for one) who helped the walkers successfully make it from Bigus' house (Point A) to Loose Changes place for the drink stop (Point 1/2 A), then onto Unstoppables (Point B). They all seemed to enjoy it all.

KEEP SCREAMING
AND RUNNING
AROUND IN CIRCLES

The 4 runners (a revitalised Mo-Ped plus Bearded, Nifty & Chesty) were on their own on trail and found it hard going. Trail was laid using blue & purple chalk arrows. There were lots of checks - which is good - but the arrows were hard to follow and often confusing, especially at checks.

They followed as best they could but ended up doing a big loop, so Bearded called the Hare for directions which resulted in them doing another loop and ending up in the same place. It was close to the hour by then so they gave up and headed back. They missed the drink stop entirely.

So they ran back to Bigus's place (Point A). Luckily Nifty had taken his car keys with him on the run, so he offered the others a lift to Unstoppables (where they guessed Point B was). Chesty took him up on his offer. The other two (Bearded and Mo-Ped) chose to walk 1.5 km to Unstoppable's place.

Apparently Buddha had arrived late and decided not to run alone. Instead, he found out that Point B was at Unstoppables, so he was waiting in his car there when the runners arrived. Everything was locked up so the runners rang the hare again & let her know they weren't coming to the drink stop - so she drove home & let everyone in. They were saved! After the circle and Nosh, some people received lifts back to their cars, which were waiting patiently for them back at Point A.

That looks like a bit of fun to me. We all need a bit of 'head fkery' in our lives at times. I think it's cool to try something different. I hope the A - B thing gets done again.

I do find it interesting that it was only the runners that got lost. The runners did not have any women in the group, so maybe they just needed to have 'a mummy look' and they'd have found trail. They even rang for directions and that didn't help much. In their defence, men aren't used to asking for directions, so I guess that must have hurt a fair bit.

I didn't get sent a map this week, so that's one less thing for me to have to do (drawing dk and balls is hard....I didn't mean for that to sound rude, it was just a happy coincidence). Instead, below I have a creative representation of the runners experience.

I also didn't get sent any charges, so that means I get to finish this trash an hour early - yay. So now, it's just finding some bbs for you, and I'm off to bed. See you next week!

Oh, Olive wants hares please.
