A couple of weeks ago there were chicken wings. This week there was chicken legs...on the run. Now, I know there is no dress code as such, but surely pyjamas and chicken legs is pushing things a bit – unless of course they are hash pyjamas.....now THERE's an idea for memorabilia

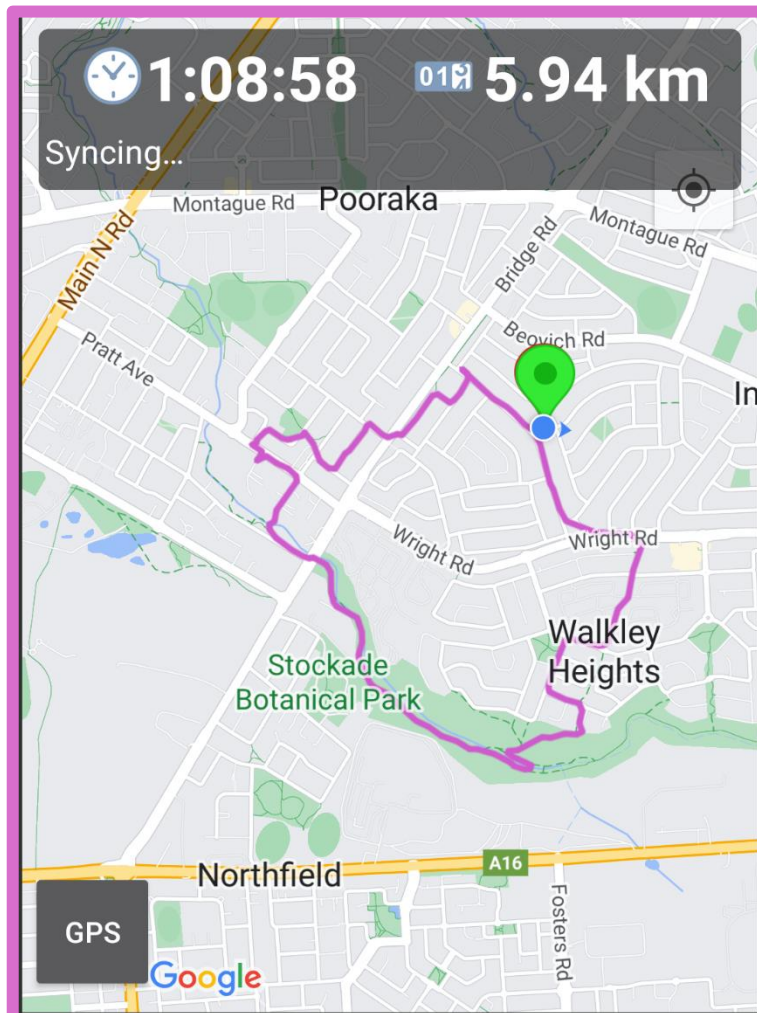

9

Unstoppable came dressed to the nines in her work attire, while Gottalottabottle came dressed to the minus nines in her night attire and chicken legs. So I guess as a team, they evened out to the standard daggyness of the average hasher.

As I pulled up to Inherendo's house, I was surprised to see Bus Stop standing out the front. Unfortunatley, because he was there, we could not park anywhere near the house. So after finding a park 5kms away, I was nice and warmed up by the time I'd walked back to the house.

We were all set to go (at our usual 10 mins late), when Olive rang to ask us to wait. So, wait we did, until the pack became too impatient. We promised to mark the checks and promptly forgot to.

Despite the previous days torrential rain, trail was surprisingly still well marked. Ten points to ‘Plaster of Paris’.

Trail sent us through the suburbs and surrounding parks. Chesty (hash horn) serenaded us as we ran and was very pleased that he’d managed to hit two notes. Out of an infinite number of possible notes, I guess its statistically possible that eventually you’d manage to hit two. 🎵🎵

Upon passing the Bridgeway Hotel, Budda couldn’t help himself and popped his head in to see “who was playing”. ‘Playing what?’ I wondered. The fool?? Turns out it was Bingo night, and he was wondering who was filling in for him.

Eventually trail led us to Yatala. I KNEW one day this group would steer me in the wrong direction. As we ran behind the dark and spooky prison each of us hoped that Olive was not following. It was a bit scary. At one point our group even had an extra member that none of us recognised. Seeing as he was wearing striped pyjama’s we assumed it was Gottalottabottle. What better group for an escapee to join...one that runs around with torches in the dead of night and where we all go by aliases. Perfect for dodgy people....after all, that’s why I joined.

Olive was no-where to be found. Apparently she had heard us in the distance, but could not find us. Perhaps she wasn't far away; helping out with conjugal visits.

The pack powered onward and upward, lighted by the breathtakingly stunning full moon above. Although, perhaps it wasn't the moon that took our breath away, but Bus Stop. Trust me, you'd rather hear his farting. Even Ninja and LeeLoo were overwhelmed.

The drink stop was perfectly timed, with the walkers arriving seconds after the runners. It was a beautiful evening, so all the hounds enjoyed their play date at the park, before howling at the moon and taking off again, heading for home.

Home was welcoming warm with a heater and fairy lights hanging from it's dicky di-do (whatever that means). I sing songs by Dido, but I doubt she has shite hanging off her.

Circle was announced with a rousing "AHHHHH" (Choo – bless you) from our RA, and the shenanigans began again.

To make up for one of the worse songs in history, nosh came to the rescue to help end the night on a high. In fact, nosh (Moussaka, bread and spinach salad – followed by a desert of homemade ice-cream cake) was SOOOO amazing that Olive and I decided that Inherendo must be hare for the rest of forever. This of course makes Olive's job as Trail Mistress super easy.

Unstoppable suggested that this weeks boobie picture should be from our own RA – affectionately known as BusT*ts.

So, I'll see you all at Nifty's virgin home on the 29th, until we are back at Inherendo's again until the end of time. I find it quite interesting that although Nifty has done 1800 runs with AH3, he's never had you lot over to his house before. He mustn't like you.
