Run 2526

Incorporating ideas gleaned from a number of reccies, the hares set a bloody good run which took both runners and walkers through some of the amazing terrain in the Bridgewater area.

Good checks kept the pack together well, with judicious use of check-backs fucking up those front running bastards (Mainly First To Come).

A welcome drink stop allowed the front runners to be dished off along a rugged trail which eventually looped back to rejoin the walkers for the trail home. A terrific circular check was appreciated so much by First to Come that he embarked on a second reciprocation, before Loose Change quickly alerted the poor bastard that he had already been around that loop once already!

The back runners were quickly promoted to the front of the pack, and soon passed the walkers on the way back to the oval. Olive Oil gleefully followed, quickly trying to decide which poor bastard she should offload the anchor to.

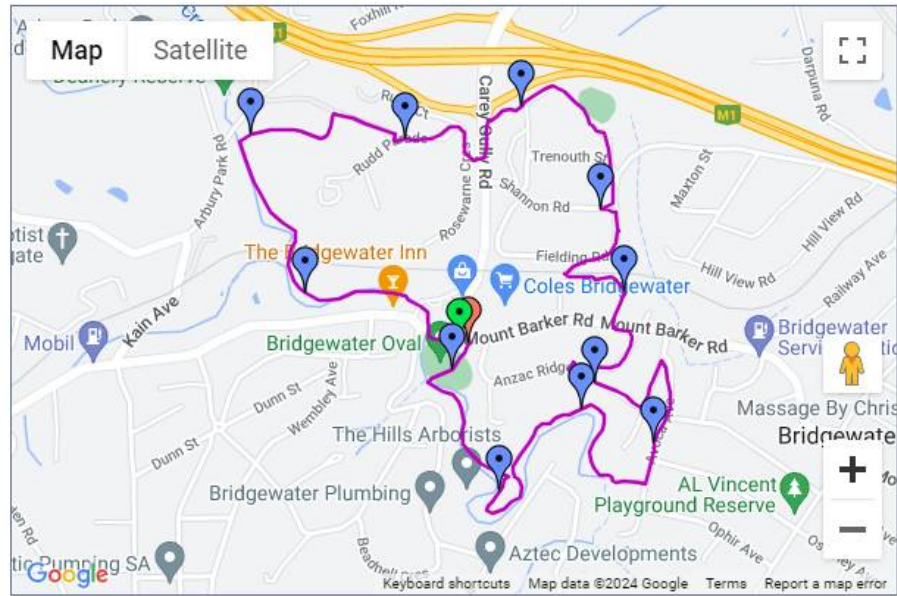

Runners and walkers were back just on the hour, having experienced scenic terrain, well-set checks and a most welcome drink stop.

Details

Back at the run site, a good-sized pack, bolstered by Frog Spawn (second week visitor) and returning long term members Tom Tom (1,000 plus runs with AH3) and Loose Lips.

There was general agreement that it had been a bloody good run and perhaps a little recognition that while considered radical by some, maybe recying of runs might be a worthwhile practice.

Applying a few radical ideas of her own, Betty Boop proceeded to throw the traditional circle agenda out of the window. In an entertaining circle she proceeded to charge the hares first, moving onwards to the inevitable list of sinner and then confirming the poor unsuspecting victim who Olive had decided to "award" the bloody anchor.

Relieved that the run had gone well, Chesty proceeded to lead us through the never ending versed of the Garibaldi Song. This rendition ended pretty close to midnight which ensured we were all hungry enough to eat generous servings of roast chicken and salad, capped off with the traditional Lion's Club Christmas Cake.
